Description:

Libro d'Oro is a site specific installation that appropriates the symbol of the Guest Book - its basic concept, linguistic codes, and visual imagery, to explore the marks the Other leaves on a place. In Italian, the Guest Book is called Libro d'Oro, or "Golden Book". In this installation, the artist interpreted these words in a literal way to imagine the larger-than-life Guest Book of the old Italian jail, home of Gallerie delle Prigioni. To do so, the artist fully covered one of its cells with gold leaf and places a myriad of texts and drawings throughout the space in the form of white neon signs that represent blown-up versions of actual graffiti left on the stone walls by prisoners over the span of more than a century. Beyond its shining walls, the cell remains empty, leaving the observers on their own inside this imaginary environment that evokes the recollection of religious byzantin icons, or palazzos of the Italian Renaissance. Here, the marks of the prisoners are sublimated and celebrated rather than hidden or erased. Beyond its opulent and quasi-mystical dimension, the piece also invites the viewer to reflect on the role of prisons and the status of the prisoners. Dovetailing with Jannis Kounellis' epochal work "Tragedia civile" (1975), the installation comes to question the loss of human identity - in this case that of the prisoner.
